

Mara Mintzer is a founder and director of Growing Up Boulder (GUB), Boulder's child- and youth-friendly city initiative, based out of the University of Colorado Boulder. She presents and writes internationally on the topic of engaging young people in planning. Prior to GUB, Mara was director of a community school, where she oversaw child and family support services on a low-income school campus. She has designed and implemented programs for underresourced children, families and neighborhoods in New York and California. Mara received her B.A. in Psychology from Brown University and her M.A. in Organizational Psychology from Teachers College, Columbia University. She speaks Spanish, French and loves to travel.